The Social Research Conference on HIV, Viral Hepatitis and Related Diseases takes place every two years at UNSW Australia, hosted by the Centre for Social Research in Health (CSRH). It is the pre-eminent conference concerned with social and public health issues and research related to HIV, viral hepatitis and related diseases, attracting over 250 participants from academia, government, community sector organisations and the health professions.

The 2016 conference theme is

margins & belonging

Stigmatised sexual and drug practices, and their associated infections and illnesses, produce specific forms of marginalisation for affected individuals and groups. But people in affected groups also forge a sense of belonging and community membership in a range of ways within broader society and within their affected communities.

This conference aims to examine how social margins and belonging are produced and contested by a range of discourses and practices within medicine, the media, research, criminal law and law enforcement, political rhetoric, health policy and health promotion, harm reduction, peer movements and activisms, human rights frameworks and the subcultures of affected communities.

The conference is intended to provide a space for different actors and stakeholders to bring together diverse points of view and interests, and thereby contribute to a broader understanding of how marginalisation and belonging are produced and played out.

Sponsorship Benefits

- Partner with one of Australia’s leading universities
- Expose your brand to key stakeholders in academia, government, community sector organisations and the health professions
- Be recognised as a key supporter in advocating for evidence-informed public health policy, strategies and education

Your sponsorship will also assist in delivering benefits to the wider community by supporting an event that:

- Brings together expert knowledge to address our most pressing issues around HIV, viral hepatitis and related diseases.
- Strengthens networks of advocates, policy makers, researchers, community and government representatives to enable a multidisciplinary and coordinated approach to work in the HIV, viral hepatitis and related diseases sector.
- Enhances knowledge and encourages the exchange of ideas and strategies among those working in the HIV, viral hepatitis and related diseases sector.
